My prayers and thoughts go out to Jennifer's family and friends, I worked with Jennifer at Maryland Plastics, for a short time. She was one of the nicest and sweetest people I knew, and I know she will be truly missed by all who knew her.

I hadn't seen her since 2006, but I worked with her at Rustic Inn, she was an absolute blast. Always nice and friendly, and able to calm everything down with a way to make everyone smile and laugh..I can't even believe she's gone from here, but she's making angels and God laugh and smile, and looking down with good cheer and saying it's ok. Everything is better now...The last time I saw her she had there Christmas bulb ear rings on and she was making jokes Gees she will be missed, it's heart breaking that an absolutely wonderful 'gal like her is gone from here. And she was one of the most beautiful people to ever walk on this planet..Girl.you will be missed..Having you here for a minute on this planet was a true blessing, and miracle....

One summer day, many years ago, Billy and I had a surprise visitor. Dr Trapnel had come out to ask a favor of us. His youngest daughter, Jennifer, had used her mother's car, with permission, but had driven to Tunnis Mills and run it in a ditch. She had missed curfew and damaged the car. For punishment she had to work and pay for the repairs. We agreed to hire her. As soon as Dr. Trapnel was gone we began to discuss how terrible it was going to be, having to try to keep a prissy, privileged teenager working. Well, surprise, Jennifer showed up early, ready to work. She helped my mother-in-law in the packing shed. She moved boxes, palletized full ones, made up empties, and everything that "Peggy" was called to do. Don't think my mother-in-law ever called her by her own name. She worked in the packing shed, the easiest, most comfortable job we had for a couple of days. Every morning we started the grading machines in the packing shed, left the necessary help there and everyone else went to the field to pick whatever was ready, out in the heat and sun. We were getting everyone on the wagon to go to the field when Jennifer begged to go with us. We agreed and while everyone else stepped on the wagon tongue and then up to the bed of the wagon, Jen walked up, put one foot on the wagon bed and just levitated on to it. Back then I was tough, but could never do that. It still annoys me. She worked just as hard as anyone else, with energy and good humor enough to "wagon surf," "balance baskets," "spin baskets" and attempt to train the dogs to enter into her silliness. She was a stranger to all the other teens, except Mike Williamson, but she made fast friends. We found out that she didn't just drag out of bed and come to work, she mucked stalls and went for riding lessons before she came to work. She tolerated all kinds of teasing and jokes at her expense but drew the line at being called Jenny, but somehow, Jennifeathers was okay. The riding lessons obviously took, I remember walking into the Trapnel's tack room and seeing walls covered with blue ribbons. Never saw her compete with saw her ride for fun and she rode properly, perfectly but with great joy and ease. She was a very graceful girl, one of the two most physically fit kids who ever helped us. She earned enough money to repair the car but just kept coming to work, out in the sun, the heat, getting dirty, breaking nails, messing her hair. Even years later, after college, all grown up, she would come help us in the evenings and on weekends. She, by then, was patient enough to "harvest cherry to mah toes." Very recently she still thought enough to help us. Jennifer and I were both betrayed by our bodies and with sympathy for me, when she made a big pot of vegetable soup or too much dessert to keep reasonably she would bring part and share with us. Can't believe that she's gone.
